Swimmers of all ages master courses

By DAN KELLY
 Broward Sports Editor

At a swimming meet with 1,207 competitors and 42 events broken into 13 age groups for men and women, minor skirmishes rage under every beach towel. After all, the U.S. Masters short-course championships produce 1,092 national age-group champions, give or take a handful for divisions in which there are no entries.

So it was to be expected that Event 35, Heat 15 (the 55-59 women's 50-yard butterfly) attracted no abnormal attention from the wrinkle-skinned mass of humanity Monday at the Hall of Fame Pool in Fort Lauderdale. But for Clara Walker and Anne Adams, it was showdown time.

"This one will be tough," Walker said before the race.

Walker, 56, of Cranston, R.I., swam in the 1948 Olympics in London. She didn't win any medals, largely because at the age of 22, she was several years past her prime. There had been no Olympics in 1940 or '44 because of World War II.

After the '48 Olympics, Walker retired from swimming and four years later entered the convent. She was a nun until 1959, when she was forced to give up her vocation for health reasons. In 1964, she married and traveled much of the world with her husband, since deceased, who was in the military.

Walker didn't return to swimming until 1981 — 33 years after her retirement — when a doctor recommended the sport as therapy for a bad back. Now a guidance counselor at a junior high school, she has become very serious about the Masters swimming program.

"It's always competitive," Walker said. "I like working out, but I don't like the meets. I take it seriously, probably too seriously."

Entering Event 35, Heat 15, Walker had swum five events and had won all five — by wide margins. This would be her last individual event and her first meeting ever with Adams.

Adams, 55, of Northridge, Calif., is in her first year in the 55-59 age division. Being a rookie in an age group generally is an advantage, but with Adams, it doesn't matter one way or the other — last year, she won the maximum of six events in her final year in the 50-54 group.

Although she never was an Olympian, Adams was a national-caliber swimmer in her youth. A mother of four, she retired from swimming from 1950 until '70, the year the Masters program began on a national level and the year she founded California's Masters program. In the 13 years since, she never has finished worse than second in any Masters event.

Like Walker, she was a perfect five (first places) for five (events) before Event 35, Heat 15. But against Walker, she was worried about matching her career-worst finish.

"Yeah, going against Clara," she said. "She's very good."

The 50 butterfly was neutral ground for both national champions. Walker prefers individual medleys and breaststroke events; Adams is best in longer events.

Walker quickly established a lead off the starting blocks, despite giving up several inches in height to Adams. She stretched her lead, pulling ahead by nearly half a body length by the turn at 25 yards.

Adams showed her strength in the second 25 yards, however, as she gradually pulled even with Walker. Then, in the final few yards, she held her breath and surged to the wall first.

"I actually thought she had won going into the wall," Adams said.

"It was a terrible race," Walker said, smiling. "At least for me."

Walker didn't like the feeling of finishing second for the first time as a master, but she'll have other shots at Adams. There'll be the long-course championships later this summer, and there always will be future years.

"I'm going to stay with it," Walker said. "I don't want to do it the rest of my life, though."

Adams, on the other hand, wants to do just that.

"Yeah, you get old if you don't," she said. "Swimming makes you feel like the cream of the crop. It makes you feel like the top 2 percent, at least as far physical fitness goes. It's wonderful."

* * *

Most of the Masters swimmers, who range in age from 25 to 85, completed their competition Monday, but the four-day championships actually conclude today. The men's and women's 1,650-yard freestyle is the only event of the day, beginning at 9 a.m.
